THE METAMORPHOSIS OF THANI

SNIFFING IT OUT

Cult fragrance, Monyette, Paris—a French favorite with a devoted following that includes Cameron Diaz, Gwen Stefani and Oprah—has fans risking jail time to slather the purported aphrodisiac on their pulse points. The French Polynesian-inspired floral scent is so in demand that stockists (including Henri Bendels in New York and Fred Segal) won't put the bottles on display. "People steal them," says Tristan Brando, the product's stateside publicist. If it's not sold out (which it almost always is), you'll have to ask for it by name and then watch as the counterculture moves with divine grace toward the 1/8-oz bottle's top-secret hiding place. —Amanda Littrell Garrigus
